

Most Realistic Halloween Costume Ever

<http://www.kttn.com/kgozfm/modules/news/article.php?storyid=110485>

Most Realistic Halloween Costume Ever News

Posted by : Randy

Posted on : 2013/10/31 4:55:14

Sure, there are plenty of fresh and original costumes ideas out there, but one San Francisco couple is giving everyone a run for their money.

â(Girlfriend) and I decided to be homemade army men for Halloween this year,â Reddit user britishracinggreen posted online. âBazooka Girl and Telephone guy. Her bazooka was made out of simple sewer pipe, and my telephone was made from a recycled Clarisonic box I found in the trash. Here we are waiting on the train platform before we head into the city.â

The bases theyâre posing on are made out of spray-painted cardboard, which they simply carried around with them all night. And speaking of spray paint, there was a lot involved in the costume preparation.

âFor my suit alone it was about eight cans of primer, and then maybe six cans of green,â britishracinggreen said on a Reddit thread. âProblem is the paint will be soaked up by the fabric

Most Realistic Halloween Costume Ever

<http://www.kttn.com/kgozfm/modules/news/article.php?storyid=110485>

---

that you need time and many many coats with separate primer dying overnight, etc. My suit needed more than double of the paint cans you have so it might be a real challenge with only six cans.ââ

As a result, the Reddit user said, their costumes became âstiff as a boardâ from all the paint.

â(I)t was hilarious trying to get our shoes on,â he wrote. âI didnât realize until the end of the night that my arms were totally cut up on the inside from bending my arm. Ouch! And taking a pee? A military-grade challenge for sure.â

And how were their costumes received by their fellow San Francisco residents? People loved it.

âWe posed for a bunch of people, in front of the train, inside the train, on (the San Francisco Municipal Railway), as the â! train rolled in, etc. It was completely fun and everyone loved it when we would strike a pose,â he wrote. âIt was fun chatting it up with people from all over.â