(ABC News) - A suspected school shooter is in custody after opening fire at a middle school and injuring at least two people in Roswell, New Mexico; according to police.

There were preliminary reports of injury, according to New Mexico State Police, however a spokesman said the extent, including the number of possible victims, was unknown.

Roswell police said the incident occurred around 8:11 a.m. local time at Berrendo Middle School.

Law enforcement sources told reporters there were two victims in the school shooting. It was not yet known whether they were children or adults.

The Eastern New Mexico Medical Center has confirmed they received two patients. They won't say their conditions at this time or how old they were.

Students were being bused from the school to Roswell Mall where parents will be allowed to pick up their children, police said. Parents are being asked by authorities to stay away from the school.

The Roswell incident is the latest school shooting to rattle the country. It comes one month after a gunman open fired at Arapahoe High School in Colorado.
