(RNN) - A Tennessee woman is receiving a lot of social media attention after attaching her 1-month-old daughter to the train of her dress during her wedding.

Shona Carter-Brooks, of Ripley, TN, stated on her Facebook page that baby Aubrey was awake, safe, and "covered by Christ."

Carter-Brooks addresses her critics via Facebook, some of whom suggested that social services be notified.

People questioning what we do, commenting all negative, and just doing the most. We good though we covered by the Blood which never lose its power. So to the media, radio, news, and whomever else wanting to talk about what WE do here you go: Media Media I see how it works regardless the situation or purpose people gone have something negative to say! The answer is we do what we want when we want long as Jesus on our side everything worked out fine and gone continue to be fine. Our 1 month old was awake and well secured on my train. Most important while y'all got ya feelings in us we had our hearts in Christ which covers all!! So keep ya mouths running for it was just that Exclusive and Epic enough we made top blog way from small town Ripley, TN and the social media doing what they do, TALK!!!! Who paid y'all for y'all comments, none so watch us as we do us! Too bless for mess!! Thank God we ain't no celebrities oops got fans, guess we is! Sign off Mr. & Mrs. Brooks!!

Carter-Brooks has since removed the photographs and some posts, but not before many captured and copied the images, passing them around Twitter and Facebook.

She also has declined BuzzFeed's request for an interview with an email response that included, "Understood everyone entitled to their own opinion so all I have to say is God bless you!"
